

Architects

As a doctor preserves people's lives today and in the future and a journalist guides and reports contemporary and future public opinion, so the profession of architect is one that seeks to both serve people today and leave a lasting impression on posterity. When you mention France, you think of the Eiffel tower, England is Big Ben, and the United States is the Statue of Liberty – all gifts from the past to our and future generations. Modern architects seek to do the same, with giant modern constructions, like the Burj Khalifa in Dubai or the Sydney Opera House in Australia.

Architecture is a unique industry spanning two fields: art and engineering. A successful architect knows how to reconcile these two conflicting areas, adding creativity, romance, and a refined aesthetic to their mastery of modern technology and precise calculations, giving birth to not only beautiful architecture, safety, and convenience, but also a beacon of the cultural characteristics of a nation and its people. Because of the strict requirements, many years of study and work experience are required, so the profession of architect is both respected and highly paid.
