

Community Service

Even in the most advanced societies, people find themselves in need of help that friends, family, or the government cannot provide. Such people may have suffered natural disasters, tragic accidents, child abandonment, or congenital diseases, or may simply be elderly people or the poor. Therefore, almost everywhere in the world, there are agencies, organizations, and individuals doing charitable activities, ready to give service to the unfortunate and to exert effort for the benefit of those who are suffering.

Every day of every month of every year, there are charitable campaigns to support the needy. Charity comes in many forms; people may donate money, food, books, or clothes, raise funds by asking for donations, volunteer at a charity shop, work to help children, give blood, or feed homeless people. A famous person might host a game show or perform at a charity concert. However, charity is not only giving money or objects, but also spreading love and planting compassion in your community and everywhere in the world.
