

IELTS Scores

Education is a way to nurture future generations. Although imperfect, the education in some countries, like Britain, America, Germany, and Japan, is viewed as superior. The teachers are formally trained and assessed, and the teaching materials are produced by scholars and specialists who collaborate to write them and who have a right to be compensated for their efforts.

Some English teachers in Vietnam have only achieved an IELTS score of 6.5. The previous lesson explained that the IELTS is just an exam score – the first step before studying or working abroad, the minimum to be accepted. If you move overseas, it takes two years or more to improve your English to communicate normally with local people. How, then, can anybody be qualified to teach English when they are barely good enough to start studying themselves?

And those who sell plagiarised books by boasting about their IELTS score are simply exploiting somebody else's work. Each book may not be expensive, but with millions of buyers, they can corruptly obtain a lot of money. Competent teachers and knowledgeable writers are vital to building a quality education system for Vietnam. Please look for the next lesson, on preparing for IELTS.
